Making sense of insurance terms

Trying to understand insurance terms can feel like learning a different language. Read on for a breakdown of common terms that may come up.

Here's the good news. Novartis Patient Support provides a Co-Pay Plus offer for KISQALI, if you're privately insured. It can help with some of those out-of-pocket costs.

What is an out-of-pocket cost?

These are health care expenses you're responsible for paying. They're not reimbursed by your insurance provider.

Deductible: what you pay for a prescription before your health plan starts to pay for its part of the cost.

Say you have a $1,000 deductible and a medical bill for $2,000

You'll pay $1,000 and hit your deductible

Your health plan will cover the rest of the medical bill, other than any co-payment for which you are responsible

Co-pay/Co-insurance: what you pay for a prescription and/or medical service. Often you'll have a co-pay, which is a fixed amount. Or you might have co-insurance, which will be a percentage of your cost.

Say you have medication that costs $100

You'll pay $20

Your health plan covers the rest^{$}
^{$}Your actual coverage will depend on your type of insurance and health plan.

Co-pay offer: financial support from your medication's manufacturer for privately insured individuals. It aims to reduce out-of-pocket costs.
